

The Memento
Blanket

Part 7 - 'Windmill'

By Anita Gibney

August already! For this month's square, I have chosen the humble windmill or pinwheel as I often see it called now.

As a child, growing up in the '70s, the windmill was a staple of a British day at the seaside. No sandcastle was complete without one and I can still remember the sound and excitement of seeing them all whirring away outside the promenade shops. They were usually made of coloured foil back then, but I can remember making paper versions too!

I'm getting very close to using up all the rainbow colours from my bits and bobs basket now. I'm glad it's nearly time for Autumn squares as I have plenty of rusts and golds!

I hope you enjoy the rest of August,

Anita x

Here is my layout for August, and a blank for you to try out your own scheme with the colours you have in your stash.

